Taxpayers' Money No More To Loafers & Drug Users

Summary:
Malcolm Turnbull seems keen to stop drug users receiving taxpayer money. A great idea - the rorts must be stopped. Cashless cards given to all chemically impaired recipients of taxpayer funds is the fair way to go ..... as long as it applies to all recipients of taxpayers' funds.

MEDIA RELEASE: Cashless Pollie Pay Card Announced

As of April One 2018 all Australian Politicians will be subject to random drug and alcohol testing. Pollies found to be users of substances that can impair performance and intellect will no longer be paid in cash. Australian taxpayers insist on a mutual obligation approach. Politicians - after all - are being granted taxpayers funds. We must expect that they can fulfill their duties and obligations competently.

Pollies identified shall no longer be paid in cash. They will be given the new cashless card which will be fully loaded with exactly the same amount paid regularly to Newstart clients.

Studies have shown that impaired politicians are in large part to blame for many of society's ills - including drug use among young unemployed people.

Young people clearly see that the political and economic system is rigged against them. They see dim prospects of meaningful work; bugger all opportunity to purchase a home of their own and the cruel likelihood of a lower standard of living than their parents. An impaired education system has also impaired their critical thinking and resilience – another legacy of poor political decision making.

An ignorant, impoverished and frightened subclass suit the interests of the elite. Perhaps in addition to chemically impaired politicians being given the card we should see to it that pollies working against our interests should be given ..... the flick.

We're only half joking. Politicians have a real knack of living by different rules to the rest of us.
